But I've often said certain in written about how org mode does not does not natively handle or events or that [REDACTED] mode does not natively handle events well into this they've, they've I've always received as a response, or people have always said Well, sure does. All you have to do is [REDACTED] add a note to the list and put an active timestamp on it. That's it. But this is not what this is merely. This is my opinion this is merely a means of manipulating or or creating a method of using org mode to manage something or to to use org mode in a manner in which it is not natively designed to handle or thought or fashioning a method to make or know do something that it was not intended. To do. And that's what these this use of [REDACTED] a node and timestamp has all that because it's [REDACTED] it's not or doesn't natively manage apps. org is a list it is basically an outline, or an [REDACTED] list. It's and that's the structure of it. That's the format of it. And in my opinion, it can be debated but my opinion lists cannot handle tasks because list do not display. Do not present. A means to visualize represent the spindle nature of time that is, is there's no way to visualize the or there's no way to denote the occupation of time, or they fill a filling of time. The way they you know there's no way to account for the time miniature of time because time is occupies it occupies it for head fills it's it is a acid it's a quantity that is an item that is spent and merely adding tabula adding, you know a no to it on the list does not represent or visualize visually in body that is that expenditure of time. One of the thing that we use the most often to do this is there's a calendar and a calendar allows you to, to notate the expenditure of time this bit where time is being filled on little squares, little boxes and whatever that does that Calif who kind of does it but the problem the calla w is is that Calif W does not isn't you know is kind of off on its own.

So that's something that I've always I've always been wanting to write about. Heaven or embodiment of a timeline might do serve a similar purpose. So,

something to think about
